My son and I discovered this book when he was two. Not only did it become one of our favorite reads, it also permanently increased his awareness of nature and his ability to observe it well. Flaps fold out into detailed three-page spreads of a variety of settings (in the woods and meadow, by a river, at the pond), and an inventory of read-and-see items listed by their specific names encourages young ones to find and identify correctly a myriad of plants, animals, and even signs that let you know an animal has been there previously. A guide at the back helps you know you have matched up all the items correctly. It's like an excellent, anywhere field guide for little ones.

I bought this book for my son's 7th birthday. It is obviously for a younger child - not to age 8, in my opinion. Although, I can't see that my son would have ever been thrilled with it, because the pictures are not very colorful. There isn't much of a story here, just mostly lists of creatures that you are supposed to locate on the pages...my son wasn't interested in having the story read to him a second time. I gave this story 3 stars for a child under 6...1 star for an older child.

We happened to find this book at the library and couldn't believe the treasure we had found! As other reviewers have stated, this fold-out book functions like an "I spy" game with gorgeous, lifelike representations of real plants and animals commonly found in nature. My toddler, almost two, loved searching for "bugs" and "butterflies", but I was personally surprised at how little I knew. Since reading this book, I've found an increased awareness during our garden and nature walks-- and even identified flora and fauna from the book that I had previously never heard of! We will be purchasing this for our child's birthday. It is absolutely well-worth making a permanent part of our book collection.

My six year old granddaughter and my four year old grandson were both fascinated with this book. Both diligently hunted for the animals and plants listed as if it were a treasure hunt. The illustrations were beautiful and the text was simple and not dry or academic. My granddaughter wanted to go for a walk after reading the book. We had a lovely time on our forty-acre plot. My grandson impressed his grandmother with his ability to find the items on the page and seemed more interested in what we would find outdoors. To interest them in nature was the purpose of my buying the book and it was a success.

Beautiful illustrations and an enjoyable story make this book a fun way for children to learn about the different animals we find outside.

This is one of my daughter's (1 year old) favorite books. She loves to open the flap of each page to reveal the wide panoramic. We find each of the items listed on the page. Cole does a great job including plants and other natural artifacts along with animals. He obviously knows his natural history, as everything is well placed. Can't recommend strongly enough. This book prompted us to buy Cole's follow up, "On the Way to the Beach", also excellent. I hope he makes more.

Beautiful illustrations and a wonderful story. It's nice to have a kids book you don't have to put away when it's just adults in the room!
